

MAJORITY FOR SPENCERIAN

Views on Handwriting by Committee of Board of Education.

ONE MAY BE CONVERTED

CHAIRMAN SAYS THE VERTICAL STYLE IS TOO LABORIOUS.

With only one exception the members of the committee on teachers and school work of the board of education expressed themselves yesterday in favor of returning to the old Spencerian system of penmanship in the public schools. Business men and other persons engaged more or less in commercial pursuits read with interest the article published in Sunday's Herald concerning the merits and demerits of the vertical and Spencerian systems and the intrinsic value of the one over the other in the vocations of every-day life.

The subject, however, at this time is considered to be of more vital importance looked at from the pedagogic point of view than from a practical one to the community to have the text books changed in the public schools. Byron Cummings, chairman of the committee on teachers and school work of the board of education, said, when the matter was called to his attention: "I have always been opposed to the vertical style, though I will say that I have not given the matter sufficient thought to express an opinion from a commercial standpoint. It has always appeared to me that the vertical style has a tendency to lead a pupil to be too mechanical, too methodical, and too fast in his work. The subject has been discussed informally, and persons with whom I have talked have, in the main, agreed with me."

Opponent May Be Converted.

"So much can be said in favor of both," said Matthew Thomas, "that I am not prepared to enter into a close analysis of the two systems at this time. I will say this, though, that so far as our public records are concerned the vertical style meets all the requirements. The hand-writing is more legible, and in that school work it will have a whole answer in that respect. Among lawyers and in commercial circles, except among men who have little correspondence, the question cuts little figure for the reason that nowadays most of the work is done on the typewriter. It is an admitted fact, I take it, that the vertical style does away with scribbles, and for that reason the handwriting by that system produces greater legibility. Yet, I am not so wedded to the vertical that I cannot be converted if it can be shown that it has faults which will prove a hindrance to graduate pupils of our schools in their search for employment."

Never Should Have Been Adopted.

H. P. Henderson, another member of the committee, said: "The vertical style is very pretty and uniform, but it is not favored by business men. My own judgment is that the vertical style has been adopted. The subject has been discussed by members of the committee of which I am a member, but no decision has been arrived at. I thus far for the reason that the matter is of too great importance and cannot be determined hastily. To make a sudden change now might lead to confusion."

Moyle Opposes Vertical System.

Oscar W. Moyle is an admirer of the Spencerian system, though inclined to give the vertical style a more extended trial. He said: "I have always been more or less opposed to the vertical style in my every-day correspondence. I have seen men when the subject has been brought up, though I have never voiced my sentiments at any meetings of the committee or of that board. I think the slant, or Spencerian system is the one which more nearly meets all requirements in general business circles. I concede, though, that the vertical style has not had a fair trial thus far, and perhaps it might be just as well to let the matter go along for a little time longer, but at that I like the old style better."

AN INTERESTING EXHIBITION.
